Identifying allele-level HLA variations is essential for donor-recipient compatibility assessment required in solid organ and hematopoietic stem cell (bone marrow) transplantation. The HLA typing was performed using PCR-Sequence-Specific Oligonucleotide (SSO) hybridization based molecular assays using Luminex X-map technology. DNA from peripheral blood in EDTA was used to amplify genomic region of interest (exon 2 and 3 for HLA class I and exon 2 for HLA class II) and hybridized with beads encoded with complementary probes. Acquired fluorescent signals were detected and analyzed using a software. Data analysis was performed using IPD-IMGT/HLA database current version as a source of HLA alleles.

Results should be interpreted in conjunction with clinical context and transplant immunology guidelines. HLA typing/matching results alone do not determine transplant eligibility; final suitability must be assessed by the treating transplant team
